HahnThe book is by far the most thorough description of the syntax and morphology of written Modern Standard Arabic. Focussing on data dating from 1990 to 2004, the book gives a comprehensive description of current usage, but also refers to Cantarino's Syntax of Modern Arabic Prose (the standard reference work for earlier Modern Standard Arabic) and even to structures from Classical Arabic, serving the reader's need for comprehensive reference to both innovations of newer usage and to classicisms used in modern contexts. The description proceeds from a concise exposition of writing and some issues of phonology (unfortunately, there is no self-contained description on phonology) to a thorough and systematic overview of morphology. More than 80 % of the book, however, deal with syntax. The syntactic description is quite clearly structured and contains accurate accounts of virtually everything that is known about Arabic syntax (disregarding topics which are not discussed outside the Generative Grammar community), often including novel observations. Although other reference works, in particular Cantarino and Syntax der arabischen Schriftsprache der Gegenwart are certainly not replaced by this book in every section, there can be no doubt that it is still the best, most thorough and most up-to-date description of Modern Standard Arabic syntax. It is an invaluable reference tool for advanced students of Arabic and everyone interested in Arabic linguists.
