do the same. I give one line of advice: READ DAN. If you planned to do house maintenance, I'd recommend pliers. Dan's book contains tools like that, the most basic thru advanced to direct writers on the path to profit. Each page is a gem of a tool, vital if you want to avoid sticking a hairpin into an electrical socket. I wish I had read this book 20 years ago. Even today, I learn from Poynter because he takes the time to stay on top of the trade. His method of organizing thought and getting it into book form will amaze you. He shows you promotion, solves critical questions and guides you through the new technology you have to follow if you want to be known as an author. Plus all that, he "shows you the money." Before you fix anything in your home, get pliers and screwdriver. Before you even THINK book, read Dan!

You will discover how to wring maximum value out of your work. This is an exciting time to be a writer. To be successful, a book needs writing, design, production and promotion. I organized and automated some of these functions years ago. The last elements just recently fell into place to establish the New Book Model. You will love it! There is not enough room in one manual to include everything that you should know about writing nonfiction. Consequently, Para Publishing has prepared many supplemental reports (called documents, special reports or instant reports) that are referenced in relevant places throughout this book.
